JSW's new energy vehicle bet

Having tied up with a Chinese company to produce cars, can JSW snag another such deal to make lithium-ion batteries?

SURAJEES DAS GUPTA
New Delhi, 8 June

They have long dominated the Indian electric car sector collectively, with over 60 per cent share of the market. But auto giants Tata Motors and Mahindra and Mahindra are now facing their toughest challenge yet, from unlikely home-grown quarters—steel-to-paints conglomerate JSW group.

With an investment tag of ₹18,000 crore, JSW is building a plant to make new energy vehicles (NEVs)—these are powered fully or partly by electricity—at a furious pace on 600 acres of land in Sambhaji Nagar (formerly Aurangabad) in Maharashtra. It will have an initial capacity of 0.5 million cars, and can expand this to 1 million. As it happens, its neighbour is none other than Toyota Kirloskar—which is also building a new plant and has ambitious plans to get into electric.

JSW Motors Ltd, the independent passenger vehicle arm of the JSW group, has put together a tentative schedule—the assembly plant will be ready by June-July this year, it will start assembling cars from November, when bookings for its first offering will also open, and cars will start to be dispatched to consumers in December-end or latest by the first week of January.

It is also building a substantial vendor ecosystem in the same area, with 10 vendors having already been signed up to make 20 key components and build their factories. Another 20-30 suppliers will be brought in in the coming weeks and months.

Unlike many other vehicle makers, JSW has gone for a collaborative model where suppliers will invest ₹7,000 crore of the total investment upfront as strategic partners. While the money from suppliers will help push localisation plans, JSW Motor will focus on assembling and technology and other products in its factories.

So what drove JSW to make such a big bet in the hyper-competitive auto business? The group is not a novice. Less than two years ago, it picked up a 51 per cent stake in JSW MG Motors with the Chinese giant SAIC Motors. That gamble has worked—the company is already the third-largest electric car player in the market, and JSW is planning to increase its stake in the firm.

Said Ranjan Nayak, CEO of JSW Motors, "As a group, we wanted another vertical, which is scalable and (where) we could make a national impact—and an automotive fit. We saw an opportunity for us because of the massive shift in technology and consumer preference, which was happening, and the market, despite hitting 5 million (units) per annum, is still underpenetrated."

The most important reason, said Nayak, is that it provides them an opportunity to build a national car brand in an industry where 70 per cent of car sales are from global players. In China, for instance, the transition to national EV brands happened when global players were pushed out.

SENSING THE COMPETITION, JSW HAS ALSO SET OUT AN AMBITIOUS LAUNCH PLAN—15 MODELS ACROSS MULTIPLE POWERTRAINS IN FOUR YEARS

Of course, with electric cars accounting for only 4 per cent of overall car sales, the market is in its infancy. But competition is heating up—by 2030, according to public announcements, global and Indian car makers are likely to launch between 25-30 new NEVs, which include Hyundai, with six launches, with Tata, and M&M adding another 9-12 new vehicles.

Sensing the competition, JSW has also set out an ambitious launch plan—15 models across multiple powertrains in four years, and at least one model every three months.

This is possible, Nayak said, pointing out that in China a new model is churned out every six months, something that used to happen every four years earlier.

The group has decided not to start from scratch. Rather than spending expensive dollars to build a car bottom up, JSW is tying up with multiple global players for accessing car technology in its NEVs so that it can offer customers multiple powertrains and models.

Its first such gamble through JSW MG Motors gave the group a launchpad to learn the business model: To get access to Chinese technology and its existing brand portfolio, launch the models chosen quickly in India, and simultaneously localise components and reduce costs. This has worked well. JSW MG Motors is now implementing a plan to increase localisation from 30-40 per cent to 70 per cent in the next 12-18 months.

It has also provided the JSW group a solid base for sales of NEVs—in May, for instance, it registered 4,790 electric vehicles, narrowing the gap with M&M, the second-largest player which registered 5,644 electric vehicles.

JSW Motors is now expanding its technology partners beyond just SAIC Motor. The strategy is not new—Chinese companies like SAIC Motors have multiple JVs, with carmakers like Volkswagen to manufacture Volkswagens, Skoda, and Audi; and with General Motors for Cadillacs and Buicks.

JSW has replicated a similar model by now signing a technology tie-up with its second partner, Chery Holding group, to bring in a possibly a model from the Jetour range as its first offering with a price tag of over ₹35 lakh in the top end.

There is, of course, a reason to bet on Chinese auto companies. Said Nayak: "We are accessing technology for NEVs from China because they are the best and relevant for India. Technology from Europe and the US, which is over-engineered, does not make sense for Indian customers."

For instance, the price of battery cells—the largest cost for an electric car maker—based on Chinese technology is half to a third of the price of those made in Japan or South Korea.

Not only that, unlike many of its competitors in India, JSW will not be on

New energy vehicle plans

- June-July 2026: Assembly lines to be ready in a new factory in Maharashtra
- September-October: To launch the JSW passenger vehicles brand
- November: To begin booking for the first cars from JSW Motors
- December-end or Jan 2027: To start deliveries

JSW Group's passenger vehicle ride

- November 2023: Takes a 35% stake in MG Motors India
- March 2024: Increases stake to 51% SAIC Motors holds the rest
- January 2025: JSW group incorporates JSW Motors as a separate vertical for new energy vehicles, independent of JSW MG Motor India
- May 2025: Ties up with Chery of China for technology to bring NEVs to India
- February-March 2026: Advertises for dealerships, gets 3,600 applications
